This is carrying party madness to the extreme, and yet it only reveals the real estimate which these corrupt managers of a party have always with nervousness and morbid vigilance. placed apon the tracmen of this State and Nation. With them, now, as ever, party leaders and party managers are every thing the people, as we have already shown, nothing.

But what are the facts in reference to the elections last year. Was ever a political campaign known where greater efforts were made to disseminate political information by both parties? Were the people ever more ready to read and hear and judge upon political matters? Was there ever a time; when all portions of socisignoi every profession and interest, were more awakened, and when the intellect and judgment of the entire mass of the people, were more severely tasked to arrive at a correct conclusion than during the last year? Political opponents met face to face and addressed the same men; those high in other and those who never dreamed of office were in the field intensely engaged in dis sminating political intelligence. The result was such as might have been arpeout, but such as the leaders of incolocoism told us could not possibly be accomplished the unqualified and stern rebuke of corrupt rulers and political errors, by a free people. In order to effect his object, he went over to Mobile, and from that place addressed letters to the different cashiers, eachosing checks on their respective Banks, with the request that Certificates of Deposite be sent-him by return mail. Letters were of course, written in answer, and these served as models for hand writing, Myle, de scription of paper, color of ink, seel, &c.

He afterwards purchased several certificates for smell accounts, the writing of which he ex tracted by some chemical process, and then filled them up for the same they now represent and tained by inquiry. ORCHARDS Many farmers choose to transplant trees as a "DOFSIDIE MILLOF name of Chambers, and is supposed to have ground; and some choose a wel day, or a time. when the will is full of water, supposing that the roots are more likely to take hold of the earth. at this time than when the soil is more dry but they should consider that the roots in this latitude sellom begin to search for food before about the first of May, and that by removing the tree in a very wel time they can never place the roots so well in the earth as when the mould is more dry and frieble. In a very wet time the little fibreus are apt to cling together, and instead of extending in every direction as they did while in the nursery, we shall find them in masses, clotted and adhering to one another, and it often happens that clusters of roote, covered up in this position, are afterwards found a mass

The best made of transplanting which we have ever tried, was to take the tree from the nurs ery early in April and bury it in the earth in some good place where the buds-should be retarded till about the first of May - then-choose a fair day, at least not a very rainy one, and place the tree in the hole prepared for it some days before hand. The roots may now be placed as they are accustomed to grow and the mellow and warm earth may be placed about them the tree need not be set deeper than it atted in the nursery; and to prevent its being blown down by the winds as well as to stop the evaporation of moisture from the roots, a pile of coarse strawy manure or poor stack hay, may be crowded down light about the body of the tree. If this is well done, the tree, in good soil, will start and grow at once quite as much as it ought to grow in.

one season. We cannot expect a young tree to thrive if we suffer the grave to seem near it. Young trees must be set where the corth may be tilled for and try them neveral what after setting or some kind of litter must be placed about them to prevent the growth of grass otherwise we may as well cut them for firewood at once they only cumber the ground and stand in the way of something which might be cultivated with profit. Tet we are set out orehards suffer the grass to grow around for several of the first years, calculating to plough the land egain, and give the trees a mart men the field will no longer pield a profitable harvest of bay.
